Communication

Lights, camera, impact, from Story to Screen

Lights. Camera. Impact. is a two-week summer camp designed for young people who want to build creativity, confidence and communication skills through filmmaking and digital storytelling.

Delivered by film industry expert tutors from London Film School, the programme uses filmmaking as a powerful learning tool. Students learn how to shape ideas visually, work collaboratively, and communicate clearly in a world where video is now the dominant form of communication.

While the course offers an exciting introduction to filmmaking, it is not only for students who want a career in film. The skills developed are highly transferable and valuable across a wide range of future pathways, including business, technology, media, law, science, social impact and the creative industries.

No previous filmmaking experience is required.
